

Masons conduct rituals of initiation. They engage in charity work. They get together formally for business meetings, and informally for socializing. They do good in the world, often in secret. (A bag of groceries winds up on the widow's doorstep, that sort of thing.) They study and ponder Masonic philosophy and history. That, plus they're often snappy dressers.